

I am on the road a great deal of the time and untill I purchased my current vehicle some 8 months ago with the satelite radio option, I was unable to enjoy listening to my car radio. If by chance, I was able to find a station that was at best tolerable, I was soon out of signal range. Now I can select from a wide variety of programming and never out run the signal. The greatest advantage is the selection offered. You are not forced to listen to hard rock or country western from seemingly every station.

If that's your choice, fine with me, but don't force it on those who may want another venue.

Anyone who has a problem with satelite radio should try it. I can guarantee you won't go back.

Let's not stand in the way of progress. If conventional AM/FM stations have a problem with satelite radio, maybe they need to raise their own level of service rather than looking to the government regulators in an attempt to stifle innovation.
